ALL STEAMSHIPS DENY GIVING OUT THE REPORT "TITANIC SAFE WITH ALL PASSENGERS"

Carpathia Operator Says He Gave Full Account of Disaster to Baltic Monday Morning—Rumors Say White Star Line
Withheld News at Command of Money Kings.

New York, April 20.—The wireless messages declaring that the Titanic, then at the bottom of the sea, was safe with all her passengers, which were given out from the offices of the White Star line all day long Monday, were not sent from the Carpathia.

Thomas Cottam, the wireless operator of the Carpathia, did not send them.

Harold Bride, one of the wireless operators of the Titanic, who was rescued by the Carpathia, did not send them.

The Olympic did not send them.

The Baltic did not send them.

Instead, the Carpathia, the Olympic and the Baltic, were in possession of, and sent out full stories of the disaster at 10:30 o'clock Monday morning.

This much was established by the investigation into the Titanic disaster by the Senate Committee today.

These messages, which made the true story of the disaster, an added horror, are still a mystery.

And they are a mystery that will take some explaining.

There were ugly rumors in New York Tuesday—rumors that the White Star officials were in possession of the truth about the Titanic Monday morning; but deliberately suppressed the news at the command of the money king of Wall street.

Little credence was given these rumors at the time. It seemed too monstrous a thing to be possible, this playing with death for the sake of dollars.

Yet the wireless operator of the Carpathia says he sent out the full story of the disaster to the Baltic, then in communication with land, at 10:30 o'clock, Monday morning.

The Baltic is owned by the White Star line. The first duty of the Baltic on receiving the news was to relay it to the White Star offices.

It is barely conceivable that the Baltic did not do so.

It is not yet certain what time the Olympic received the news. But almost surely, it was early Monday.

And the duty of the Olympic was to give the news to the White
